WILL MOVE CAMP OF COLORED GUARDSMEN

Transfer Ordered So As to Avoid Friction With Settlement Nearby.

The colored infantry camp at Camp Ordway will be moved from its present site near Radio station to between the Third Infantry and the mounted troops camp. The transfer of tents will begin today, under the direction of Capt. R. M. McGonegal.

The present site is near a colored settlement, and there has been friction between the inhabitants and the colored soldiers. This settlement is also believed to be the center of the shooting that has often endangered the lives of the militiamen at night.

The removal of the First Separate Battalion detachment from near the settlement will restore quiet around the camp, officers believe. Only about 25 men are now in the colored camp, but recruits are being received every day.

JAILED FOUR TIMES IN MONTH. Baltimore Man Returns to Cell After Single Day Off.

Baltimore, Aug. 10.—Discharged from jail only yesterday, Thomas Canfield, 65 years old, is in limbo again today, having been sentenced this morning by Justice Ranft, in the Southern Police Station, to three months in the House of Correction, for being habitually disorderly.

Since July 1 he has been arrested four times.

British Plan Bombing Reprisals. London, Aug. 10.—A high official stated today that bombing reprisals will be taken by the British for every Zeppelin raid on England in which women and children are killed.

"I WISH EVERYBODY COULD KNOW WHAT A FINE THING IT IS"

Mr. Roulston Suffered from Acute Indigestion, Gastritis and Constipation.

"When I began taking Dremo I was truly in a bad shape, but a few bottles put me on my feet again and I feel I must tell everybody about it," said Mr. Jno. Roulston, of 623 Fifth Street, Northeast, who has been baggage master on the Pennsylvania Railroad from Washington to New York for many years.

"For a number of years I have suffered from indigestion in the acute form. Any solid food would sour in my stomach, form gas and bloat me all up. Sometimes I'd have smothering spells and feel like my breath would stop. I got nervous and dizzy and right sidly-headed, and never got a good full night's rest. At times I would be badly constipated, too.

"Nothing the doctors gave me seemed to do any good, and I kept growing worse. Several friends advised me to take Dremo, and it certainly is wonderful the way it has helped me. It was just what I needed. Before I finished the first bottle I could sleep better, my food did not cause the pains and gas as I do now. I'm more than grateful for what it has done for me and I wish everybody could know what a wonderful medicine it is."

Dremo is sold in all the O'Donnell Drug Stores, Bury's in Anacostia, Allen's in Alexandria.—Adv.

HUGHES MINGLES WITH FARMERS

G. O. P. Candidate Talks Crops With Dakota Rural Crowds.

By WILLIAM HOSTER.
(International News Service.)
Fargo, N. Dak., Aug. 10.—With the big cities left behind, the coast drive of the candidate has become more picturesque. Hughes is developing into a seasoned candidate. In addition to the two big meetings today at Grand Forks and Fargo half a dozen stops were made at towns and villages along the line.

Groups of farmers and their wives gathered at these points and his voice still being husky the candidate forewore speeches. Following the plan adopted yesterday he alighted from the rear end of his car at each stop and went among the natives, shaking hands, engaging them in conversation about crops and patting the children on the head.

Louis Hill, son of the late James J. Hill, whom he succeeded as president of the Great Northern Railroad, attached his car to the train at St. Paul last night and at each of the smaller stops today flung out among the crowds paper hats and confetti. The towns have thus taken on an additional air of gayety and enthusiasm. In consequence Hughes is unbending more. The farmers are getting a new impression of him.

Wins Farmers' Praise. As he and Mrs. Hughes circulated among the crowd at Reynolds this afternoon, the farmer after shaking hands with the candidate cried:

"Go on, he ain't so human after all. 'Pleased to meet you, Governor,' is the stock form of greeting while Hughes salutes is usually 'how are you?'"

At Hillsboro, where he and Mrs. Hughes held an impromptu reception, at the side of the railroad tracks, the engineer in charge of the train started his locomotive and for a minute it seemed that the campaign party would lose its candidate. Mr. Hughes started to run after the train. The governor was in the midst of a talk with several farmers on crops when he saw Mrs. Hughes running for the train.

"Wait, mother," he cried with a laugh. "These are pretty good people; let the train go."

One hundred yards up the track the train was then brought to a stop and the situation was saved.

Crowd on Hands Early. Grand Forks was reached at 7:35 this morning. As the train drew into the station, the local band burst into the Star Spangled Banner and the reception committee crowded the platform of the Hughes car. The door opened and Chester Farnum, in charge of the train, tipped out with his finger to his lip. "Shh," he cautioned. "The Governor is still asleep. He has had several hard days and if you can come back about 9 o'clock he will be obliged."

The notes of the National air then died out, notebooks were folded up and the local committee and the members of the band stole away.

With the arrival of 9 o'clock they were back again.

The refreshed and smiling candidate emerged from his car and the program was proceeded with.

Shakes Thousand Hands. A reception at the hotel proceeded the meeting at the opera house at Grand Forks. One thousand people shook Hughes' hand and the procession was formed to the meeting place.

After Grand Forks, Reynolds, Hillsboro and Grandin were made, each for three-minute stops. Fargo was reached at 3:08 p. m. The day in North Dakota has been characterized by deep interest in his candidate's appearance and what he has to say, rather than to any marked enthusiasm.

Good crowds have assembled at the station and applauded rather than cheered. There is an ardent belief in respect for Mr. Hughes' sincerity, but there is no evidence of any great stirring up of the people.

Hughes Denounces Wilson's Rule As "Scandalous" Page

In opening his address, "America first in the hearts of all our people, is the note I would wish to be brought clearer and clearer throughout our land."

Extolling the American opportunities, he said:

"An idle American is almost a contradiction in terms. An idle American must always feel uncomfortable."

Passing then to a renewal of his attack upon the administration he said:

"My friends, we have a splendid system of government on paper, but we want that splendid system of government vitalized by impartial efficient administration, so that government shall not be only on a par, but shall be in fact for the people in both state and nation."

"It is easy to have a paper program. It is a very different thing to have a splendid businesslike conduct of public affairs."

"I think I may say," he continued, "that today the government of the United States is recklessly wasteful, shamefully incompetent, and extravagant—a reproach to the intelligence of a free people—because of its inefficiency."

Brings Blush of Shame.

"It is a matter which brings the blush of shame to the cheek of every American. It ought to be stopped. If I am elected President, to the extent of my ability, I propose to stop it."

A burst of applause followed this declaration, and another greeted this expression of policy.

"My friends, I stand for a businesslike administration of the government of the United States. Not for politics, not to reward friends, not to build up a personal machine, not to put myself in any particular position of favor, but honestly to administer the affairs of the United States."

"You can declaim the most beautiful sentences," he said, "and you can write the loftiest professions, but after all, administration is the test of the verity of all professions."

He discussed the economic problems the United States must face following the close of the European war, and added this bit of personal introspection:

"I confess it is that which appeals to me. When the summons came to me, it had no appeal in it from the more standard of a personal honor, or as was that honor, because I knew that for the man himself there is nothing in it but responsibility. There is not a waking hour, but what is full of the sense of obligation. There is not a moment when I am not crowded with demands that cannot be met. For the man himself the honor, great as it is, is an empty thing."

"The burden of responsibility is a real, a crushing, a terrible thing. Nothing could have induced me to accept this life I enjoyed into this sort of activity merely to go through the political motions. Not a bit of it. I am here because I have a vision of what a man needs. I do not profess to carry with me a banner. I do not profess to be a prophet. I do profess to have some ability in analyzing facts and in understanding situations and to the best of that ability I want to serve the United States."

Unity of American Life.

At Grand Forks Hughes said: "I came to this great agricultural State fresh from communities where industrial interests are paramount. There is constantly borne in upon me the thought of the unity of American life, despite the diversity of its resources and its interests. We are all linked together in a common destiny. We are all dependent upon the success of the whole. We know the vast importance of the upbuilding of the industries of the country. We also know that at the base of all of our prosperity is the agricultural interests of the country. We know you cannot build up one great interest at the expense of the rest of the country. We know that what will promote the prosperity of farmers, and we know that we neglect the just interests of agriculture, industry will wither and the prosperity of our great cities will absolutely fall."

Hits High-Sounding Phrases.

"America will not hold her own by declamation. America will not hold her own by high-sounding phrases. America is going to hold her own, if she does hold her own, after the ending of this war and the creation of a new and enlarged Europe, because America has the sense and the ability to understand the facts, to reduce politics to the minimum, to reduce everything that tends to weigh us down with unnecessary talk to the minimum, to get at the facts of our life, and fearlessly obtain that which is essential to our security and progress."

"I stand for preparedness; I stand for America ready to meet whatever emergency she is called upon to meet. I do not believe that this country should ever suffer because she has failed to take proper precaution and to present herself to the world as a nation able to make good what she says in defense of rights known to be just."

"The same indomitable spirit that gave us our union, that established this government, still exists in the American people. The same spirit that conserved this Union fifty years ago and that will conserve it for the future. The Union should be indestructible—still persists in the American people. We do not wish conflict. We are opposed to strife. We want peace and good order. We covet no conquest. We are not aiming at any aggressive policy. We are not trying to interfere with anybody's business or with things that do not concern us."

Have Had a Spectacle.

"But when the rights of American citizens are involved and that which we are entitled to have under international law is denied American spirit and the sense of American justice demands that we shall be ready and able to carry forth our demands, and that readiness and ability shall be appreciated so that we shall not be drawn into unnecessary conflicts. We have had a spectacle—we now have—down on the border, of unpreparedness; of failure to take note in advance of obvious conditions; of a lack of foresight; of a lack of ordinary decent preparation for that which is likely to happen at any time."

"We talk sometimes about a reasonable increase in our regular army as though we were in danger of militarism in this country. Why are we so far away from militarism or any sort of militaristic sentiment in this country that it is almost an insult to the intelligence of the American people to discuss it."

In Need of Precaution.
"We are, however, in need of reasonable precaution. Why can we not have American people protect this border without calling out men and boys from all the shops and factories and offices throughout the United States and put a lot of raw recruits down there on the border to the service to which they are assigned? Are we not a great enough nation to have sufficient foresight; are we not a great enough nation to be able to protect our borders in a sensible fashion by means of sensible preparedness? I believe the American people feel we should have no militaristic preparation but adequate preparation to assure our peace and security."

"Whenever we have a right under international law, the fact we have that right is known to every foreign office. It is known to every person in charge of foreign relations. If we allow ourselves to state that right in a firm and determined manner it should carry conviction to everyone who recognizes our rights. Established peace and respect throughout the world."

Discusses Economic Issues.

Hughes then retold once more of the dismissal of E. Dana Durand from the Census Bureau and read a letter to Mr. Durand contradicting Secretary of Commerce Redfield and supporting the Hughes charge that Durand was dismissed to make room for a Democrat.

After reading the letter Mr. Hughes said:

"That is the voluntary retirement of one of the most eminent men in administrative positions to make room for a man appointed because of political services. I say that is symptomatic; that is scandalous. The American people can't be efficient if that sort of thing is continued and I want to say that if this condition is symptomatic I would like to have authority to investigate the administration for about six months."

The remainder of his address was confined to discussion of Mexico and preparedness along the lines of his Grand Forks address this morning. A significant feature of the day's events was the presence of Kynn J. Frazier, gubernatorial candidate of Mexico and the National League of North Dakota, on the platform as presiding officer of the Grand Forks meeting.

The farmers' Non-Partisan League has undisputedly captured the political convention of the State. Its endorsement is tantamount to carrying the State. Though no official action has yet been taken by the league, it is generally understood here that the league's vote will go solidly to Hughes.

Will Carry North Dakota.

Mr. Frazier said tonight: "I don't think there is any doubt but that Hughes will carry North Dakota by at least 50,000 plurality. Out here the people are not wild over preparedness, but we do not understand that Mr. Hughes is advocating any sort of preparedness that means militarism. His speech today was perfectly satisfactory to the farmers of this point and he will have their support."

Mr. Hughes and his party left here at 11 a. m. for Bismarck. By a change of schedule the nominee will add half a dozen stops to his originally planned tour in his progress, including one or two minutes at Medora, where the ranch formerly owned by Col. Theodore Roosevelt is located.

As arranged, the schedule now reads: Arrive Bismarck 8:30; leave 8:30; Arrive Mandan 7:45; leave 7:47; in regular order then the train will stop for two minutes at each of the following cities:

Dickinson, Medora, Beach, in North Dakota; Glendive, Milk, Forsyth and Billings, in Montana. A night meeting will be held in Billings where the candidate will reach at 7:30 tomorrow evening. At midnight he will leave Billings for Helena.

PENSION BILL CAUSES HITCH

Protests of Police and Firemen Voiced in Herald Brought to Committee.

Conferees on the District bill began their hearings yesterday with enough points in dispute on provisions of the measure to make prolonged sessions probable.

Despite the opinion of high officials of the police and fire departments that the dissatisfaction with the pension legislation was not serious, members of the conference committee learned from many members of the uniformed force that the protest voiced in The Herald yesterday extended throughout the rank and file.

The conferees will inspect the bill that has been drawn up by a subcommittee of the House District committee considering pension legislation and that draft may be substituted for the La Follette amendment.

W. T. Gallier and Robert Harper, representing the Bankers' Association; Thomas Grant, of the Chamber of Commerce, and Edwin F. Colladay, of the Board of Trade, urged the conferees to hold a public hearing before they accepted the Sterling amendment which places a tax on intangible property in the District.

The reasons for this request were stated as follows:

First: We believe that no legislation of this character should be enacted into a law without a full consideration of the very many important questions that necessarily arise in the District of Columbia in reference to taxation, and

Second: We believe that no further tax upon the citizens of Washington should be exacted than those taxes which will yield a revenue sufficient to pay the necessary expenses of the city government, and any tax which goes beyond that point would seem to be a burden upon the citizen.

We do not deem it necessary to enter into any discussion of the questions involved in this communication, as we sincerely trust that the request which we now make on behalf of the Board of Trade, and which, as we understand, has been made by many other organizations in the District of Columbia, will be granted.

The conferees of the Senate entered the conference determined to stand firm for the Senate amendments to the bill, and particularly the amendment striking out the House rider doing away with the "half-and-half" plan of appropriating for several weeks yet. This amendment was adopted by the Senate by a three-to-one vote, while in the House a comparatively small majority was registered this year in favor of doing away with the half-and-half plan.

Two hundred men have applied for enlistment in the District militia during the past ten days, is the showing of the tri-monthly report of Capt. E. Spencer Bliss, recruiting officer at Camp Ordway.
